Tallinn's Synagogue is by far the most modern house of worship in the city. With the opening of the synagogue, the Jewish community was given a new approach. In addition to hosting religious services and Jewish holiday celebrations in their 200-seat main hall, this oversees the preparation and distribution of kosher food, as well as hosting a Mikvah, and a Jewish museum.

-Inside visit to Tallinn Jewish Museum

New Tallinn Jewish exhibition center presents life of a Jewish community in Estonia, beginning from the 19th century. The visitors will be able to learn all about their presence in Estonia and to see how much of the present culture was influenced by the community.

The main part of the exhibition includes photographs, historical documents and different objects presented to the museum both by private donors and other museums. You'll be able to get to know how the Estonian Jews dealt with the pre-World War Two period, German occupation and the Soviet era. Another part of the exhibition shows the revitalization of Jewish communal life in the late 1980s and the development of education, science, arts, sports and business in the country.
